1. The area of the Gryfow uranium mine lies about six kilometers southeast of Gryfow (N 51-02, E 15-25) on the eastern edge of the village of Robiszew (see No. 1 on attached sketch) and is fenced in with a barbed wire fence about 1 1/2 meters high.
2. The pit area is about two kilometers long and one kilometer wide, extending southwest-northeast. There is only one pit in the area, in the eastern part. There are a few small buildings near it, probably used for the pit management and for garages.
3. The output of the pit is not known. The partly sorted ore is taken away two or three times a week in two-ten trucks to Legnica (N 51-12, E 16-12) where there is a Soviet center, with a broad gauge railroad track leading toward the USSR. The ore is loaded onto a train and taken away to an unknown destination.
4. The technical management and supervision of the pit is carried out by Russians who probably live near the mine.
5. There are probably 60 to 70 workers at the mine; they are brought from Gryfow by truck. One shift is worked daily. No prisoners have been seen at the mine. The workers in the pit earn about 2,000 slotys a month.
6. The pit area and entrance are guarded by Russians armed with machine carbines. The guards live near the pit. Employees with access to the area have a special pass. When engaged to work at the mine, they sign a declaration that they will not tell anyone what they have seen.
